Dr. Longjohn was the founding Executive Director of the Consortium to Lower Obesity in Chicago Children (CLOCC; www.clocc.net), where he led the development and operations of one of the largest obesity-centered coalitions in the country. He is currently a faculty member in the Department of Pediatrics at Northwestern University's Feinberg School of Medicine, and serving as a Fellow at the Altraum Institute. At Altarum, he is a Co-Director of the 2-year, $2.5 million, Childhood Obesity Mission Project (CHOMP) which is focused on catalyzing early childhood centered approaches to the prevention of obesity. He also serves several foundations, non-profit organizations, and state and local government agencies as a program and policy development consultant. Current clients include CLOCC, the Chicago Department of Public Health and the Chicago Public Schools, the Michigan Department of Community Health, and the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation.
